

Camelion Air Force Fighter Crews Find Insect Life In India Cause Much Trouble

By Flight Lieutenant K. G. B. Wright
R.C.A.F. Public Relations Officer in India.

ROYAL CANADIAN Air Force fighter crews on the Burma front have elephants as neighbors, and a bumper squadron in Bengal lives next door to a tiger. One night suggested they get together and have a circus, but, although to a nationalistic India is a part of the Canadian it isn't always just that. The Canadians work, eat and sleep in straw-bamboo huts in India. These huts serve to keep out most, but not all, of the "animal" life with which India is beset.

Giving up trying to identify many of the strange creatures they have seen, the Canadians have taken into the habit of classifying mosquitoes, flies and elephants, and just about everything in between as "animals." The mosquitoes are everywhere, and, although they are not all malarial-bearing, the Canadians take elaborate precautions against them—they always sleep under a net and in the evenings long-sleeved shirts and slacks are used. Antidotes against them are used, and antidotes against them in certain "bad" areas are used.

There are many other insects which kill, with varying results. The wood-eating termites are everywhere, and are almost universal, known "charpy bugs." When you break out in the heat of about 110 in the shade, the things you come of square inches of light, you know it is "charpy bugs." These are only found on the antipodes or here, however, but in any case, they are a pain, and they are not as infested there for a few minutes and the lack of your thighs for a few minutes.

Thyphus-bearing lice are not common, but the Canadians in the forward areas, where the weather is not so hot, sometimes occasionally pick up a few. These are quite red, black, white or brown, which generally give you a rash, but they are not as infested there for a few minutes and the lack of your thighs for a few minutes.

They are usually found in the morning, or in the evening, when they are in the air, and they are not as infested there for a few minutes and the lack of your thighs for a few minutes.

Other members of the "Canada House" have had their legs in this line. Probably Lieutenant Wood had good luck and there had been his own part—but Lieutenant Wood is now in the British Ambulance and Vicarage House.

The gold courier of the candy laundries young man has new friends for Britain here since he came to the Burma front where he has a bomb that didn't explode severed both his legs above the knees. As that was his last, he was evacuated to this country when the war began came true in Brooklyn, and it all happened so quickly Barrett could hardly believe it was the people of Washington.

Air Gunners Were Responsible For Bringing Safely Home The Crews Of Two Fighter Planes

THE air gunner must be a man of quick decision, judgment and resource. A great gunner is more than an expert with his guns. An observer must take into consideration safety on navigation, an observer may take over some of the duties of the observer. If necessary, they must give a running commentary to the pilot on the many things that are going on around them to make an attack. They must keep watch for an incident, report on it, and often photograph it.
